First Chapter, which telleth of the sun.

The sun: the soaring eagle,² the turquoise prince, the god.

He shone, cast forth light, sent forth rays [of light] from himself. Hot, he burned men—he burned them exceedingly, and made them sweat. He turned men's skins brown, darkening them, blackening them, blistering them.

Every two hundred and sixty days, when his feast day came, then his festival was honored and celebrated. They observed it on his day sign, called Naui olin. And before his feast day had come, first, for four days, all fasted. And when it was already his feast day, when first he came forth, when he emerged and appeared, incense was offered and burned; blood [from the ears] was offered. This was done four times during the day—when it was dawn; and at noon; and past midday, when already [the sun] hung [low]; and when he entered [his house]—when he set; when he ended [his course].

And early in the morning it was said: "Now he will work; now the sun will labor. How will the day end?" And when night fell, it was said: "He hath worked; the sun hath labored." When he issued forth [at dawn], sometimes he was blood-colored, bright red, ruby-red. And sometimes he was quite pale, white-faced, pallid, because of the clouds—a mist, a

Eclipse of the Sun

When this came to pass, he turned red; he became restless and troubled. He faltered and became very yellow. Then there were a tumult and disorder. All were disquieted, unnerved, frightened. There was weeping. The common folk raised a cry, lifting their voices, making a great din, calling out, shrieking. There was shouting everywhere. People of light complexion³ were slain [as sacrifices]; captives were killed. All offered their blood; they drew straws through the lobes of their ears, which had been pierced. And in all the temples there was the singing of fitting chants; there was an uproar; there were war cries. It was thus said: "If the eclipse of the sun is complete, it will be dark forever! The demons of darkness will come down; they will eat men!"

Second Chapter, which telleth of the moon.

The moon (Tecuciztecatl).

When he⁴ newly appeared, he was like a small bow, like a bent, straw lip ornament—a small one. He did not yet shine. Very slowly, he went growing larger, becoming round and disc-shaped. In fifteen days he was completely rounded and filled out, as he became entire and mature. And when he waxed full and round, then he appeared, then he arose there at the place where the sun appeared. When it was already dark, [he was] like a very large, earthen skillet—very round, circular. [He was] as if red, a bright, deep red.

And after this, when he had already followed his course a little, when he had risen high, he became white. It was said: "Already he shineth; already the moon is brilliant; already he giveth forth moonbeams." He was then seen to be pale, very white. Then appeared [what was] like a little rabbit stretched across his face. If there were no clouds, if it were not overcast and covered by clouds, like [the sun] he shone, and it was like daytime. It was said: "[It is] almost [like] day; everywhere it is bright. Light is spread everywhere."

And when he had completely reached and attained his brilliance, for as many days as he had thus waxed and been round, little by little he again grew small; he became smaller. Again he became as when he had newly appeared. Gradually he waned and proceeded to vanish. It was said: "Already the moon is dying; now he slumbereth soundly—he falleth into a deep sleep. It is already toward morning, near dawn, when he ariseth." And when he had completely disappeared, it was said: "The moon hath died."

BEHOLD THE FABLE in which it is told how a little rabbit lay across the face of the moon. Of this, it is told that [the gods] were only at play with [the moon]. They struck his face with [the rabbit]; they wounded his face with it—they maimed it. The gods thus dimmed his face. Thereafter [the moon] came to arise and come forth.

It is told that when yet [all] was in darkness, when yet no sun had shone and no dawn had broken—it is said—the gods gathered themselves together and took counsel among themselves there at Teotihuacan. They spoke; they said among themselves:

"Come hither, O gods! Who will carry the burden? Who will take it upon himself to be the sun, to bring the dawn?"

And upon this, one of them who was there spoke: Tecuciztecatl presented himself. He said: "O gods, I shall be the one."

And again the gods spoke: "[And] who else?"

Thereupon they looked around at one another. They pondered the matter. They said to one another: "How may this be? How may we decide?"

None dared; no one else came forward. Everyone was afraid; they [all] drew back.

And not present was one man, Nanauatzin; he stood there listening among the others to that which was discussed. Then the gods called to this one. They said to him: "Thou shalt be the one, O Nanauatzin."

He then eagerly accepted the decision; he took it gladly. He said: "It is well, O gods; you have been good to me."

Then they began now to do penance. They fasted four days—both Tecuciztecatl [and Nanauatzin]. And then, also, at this time, the fire was laid. Now it burned, there in the hearth. They named the hearth teotexcalli.

And this Tecuciztecatl: that with which he did penance was all costly. His fir branches [were] quetzal feathers, and his grass balls [were] of gold; his maguey spines [were] of green stone; the reddened, bloodied spines [were] of coral. And his incense was very good incense. And [as for] Nanauatzin, his fir branches were made⁵ only of green water rushes—green reeds bound in threes, all [making], together, nine bundles. And his grass balls [were] only aromatic reeds. And his maguey spines were these same maguey spines. And the blood with which they were covered [was] his own blood. And [for] his incense, he used only the scabs from his sores, [which] he lifted up. For these two, for each one singly, a hill was made. There they remained, performing penances for four nights. They are now called pyramids—the pyramid of the sun and the pyramid of the moon.

And when they ended their four nights of penitence, then they went to throw down and cast away, each one, their fir branches, and, indeed, all with which they had been performing penances. This was done at the time of their lifting [of the penance]; when, well into the night, they were to do their labor; they were to become gods.

And when midnight had come, thereupon [the gods] gave them their adornment; they arrayed them and readied them. To Tecuciztecatl they gave his round, forked heron feather headdress and his sleeveless jacket. But [as for] Nanauatzin, they bound on his headdress of mere paper and tied on his hair, called his paper hair. And [they gave him] his paper stole and his paper breech clout.

And when this was done, when midnight had come, all the gods proceeded to encircle the hearth, which was called teotexcalli, where for four days had burned the fire. On both sides [the gods] arranged themselves in line, and in the middle they set up, standing, these two, named Tecuciztecatl and Nanauatzin. They stood facing and looking toward the hearth.

And thereupon the gods spoke: They said to Tecuciztecatl: "Take courage, O Tecuciztecatl; fall—cast thyself—into the fire!"

Upon this, he went [forward] to cast himself into the flames. And when the heat came to reach him, it was insufferable, intolerable, and unbearable; for the hearth had blazed up exceedingly, a great heap of coals burned, and the flames flared up high. Thus he went terrified, stopped in fear, turned about, and went back. Then once more he set out, in order to try to do it. He exerted himself to the full, that he might cast and give himself to the flames. And he could in no way dare to do it. When again the heat reached him, he could only turn and leap back. He could not bear it. Four times indeed—four times in all—he was thus to act and try; then no more could he cast himself into the fire. For then [he could undertake it] only four times.

And when he had ended [trying] four times, thereupon they cried out to Nanauatzin. The gods said to him: "Onward, thou, O Nanauatzin! Take heart!"

And Nanauatzin, daring all at once, determined

—resolved—hardened his heart, and shut firmly his eyes. He had no fear; he did not stop short; he did not falter in fright; he did not turn back. All at once he quickly threw and cast himself into the fire; once and for all he went. Thereupon he burned; his body crackled and sizzled.

And when Tecuciztecatl saw that already he burned, then, afterwards, he cast himself upon [the fire]. Thereupon he also burned.

And thus do they say: It is told that then flew up an eagle, [which] followed them. It threw itself suddenly into the flames; it cast itself into them, [while] still it blazed up. Therefore its feathers are scorched looking and blackened. And afterwards followed an ocelot, when now the fire no longer burned high, and he came to fall in. Thus he was only blackened—smutted—in various places, and singed by the fire. [For] it was not now burning hot. Therefore he was only spotted, dotted with black spots, [as if] splashed with black.

From this [event], it is said, they took—from here was taken—the custom whereby was called and named one who was valiant, a warrior. He was given the name quauhtlocelotl. [The word] quauhtli came first, it is told, because, [as] was said, [the eagle] first entered the fire. And the ocelot followed thereafter. Thus is it said in one word—quauhtlocelotl; because [the latter] fell into the fire after [the eagle].

And after this, when both had cast themselves into the flames, when they had already burned, then the gods sat waiting [to see] where Nanauatzin would come to rise—he who first fell into the fire—in order that he might shine [as the sun]; in order that dawn might break.

When the gods had sat and been waiting for a long time, thereupon began the reddening [of the dawn]; in all directions, all around, the dawn and light extended. And so, they say, thereupon the gods fell upon their knees in order to await where he who had become the sun would come to rise. In all directions they looked; everywhere they peered and kept turning about. As to no place were they agreed in their opinions and thoughts. There was dissension when they spoke. Some thought that it would be from the north that [the sun] would come to rise, and placed themselves to look there; some [did so] to the west; some placed themselves to look south. They expected [that he might rise] in all directions, because the light was everywhere.

And some placed themselves so that they could watch there to the east. They said: "For there, in that place, the sun already will come to arise." True indeed were the words of those who looked there and pointed with their fingers in that direction. Thus they say, [that] those who looked there [to the east were] Quetzalcoatl; the name of the second was Ecatl; and Totec, or Anauatl itecu; and the red Tezcatlipoca. Also [there were] those who were called the Mimixcoa, who were without number; and four women—Tiacapan, Teicu, Tlacoyehua, and Xocoyotl.

And when the sun came to rise, when he burst forth, he appeared to be red; he kept swaying from side to side. It was impossible to look into his face; he blinded one with his light. Intensely did he shine. He issued rays of light from himself; his rays reached in all directions; his brilliant rays penetrated everywhere.

And afterwards Tecuciztecatl came to rise, following behind him from the same place—the east,—near where the sun had come bursting forth. In the same manner that they had fallen into the fire, just so they came forth. They came following each other.

And so they tell it; [so] they relate the story and repeat the legend: Exactly equal had they become in their appearance, as they shone. When the gods saw them, [thus] exactly the same in their aspect, then once more there was deliberation. They said: "How may this be, O gods? Will they perchance both together follow the same path? Will they both shine like this?"

And the gods all issued a judgment. They said: "Thus will this be; thus will this be done."

Then one of the gods came out running. With a rabbit he came to wound in the face this Tecuciztecatl; with it he darkened his face; he killed its brilliance. Thus doth it appear today.

And when this was done, when both appeared [over the earth] together, they could, on the other hand, not move nor follow their paths. They could only remain still and motionless. So once again the gods spoke: "How shall we live? The sun cannot move. Shall we perchance live among common folk? [Let] this be, that through us the sun may be revived. Let all of us die."

Then it became the office of Ecatl to slay the gods. But they say thus: that Xolotl wished not to die. He said to the gods: "Let me not die, O gods." Wherefore he wept much; his eyes and his eyelids swelled.

And when death approached near unto him, he fled from its presence; he ran; he quickly entered a field of green maize, and took the form of, and quickly turned into, two young maize stalks [growing] from a single root, which the workers in the field have named xolotl. But there, in the field of green maize, he was seen. Then once again he fled from him; once more he quickly entered a maguey field. There also he quickly changed himself into a maguey plant [consisting of] two [parts] called mexolotl. Once more he was seen, and once more he quickly entered into the water and went to take the shape of [an amphibious animal called] axolotl. There they could go to seize him, that they might slay him.

And they say that though all the gods died, even then the sun god could not move and follow his path. Thus it became the charge of Ecatl, the wind, who arose and exerted himself fiercely and violently as he blew. At once he could move him, who thereupon went on his way. And when he had already followed his course, only the moon remained there. At the time when the sun came to enter the place where he set, then once more the moon moved. So, there, they passed each other and went each one his own way. Thus the sun cometh forth once, and spendeth the whole day [in his work]; and the moon undertaketh the night's task; he worketh all night; he doth his labor at night.

From this it appeareth, it is said, that the moon, Tecuciztecatl, would have been the sun if he had been first to cast himself into the fire; because he had presented himself first and all [his offerings] had been costly in the penances.

Here endeth this legend and fable, which was told in times past, and was in the keeping of the old people.

Eclipse of the Moon.

When the moon eclipsed, his face grew dark and sooty; blackness and darkness spread. When this came to pass, women with child feared evil; they thought it portentous; they were terrified [lest], perchance, their [unborn] children might be changed

Third Chapter, which telleth of the stars.

The Fire Drill⁶

When [these] appeared and set forth, incense was offered and burned. Thus was it said when Yoaltecuhli [and] Yacauitztli had come forth: "What will the night bring? How will the day break?"

And these were offered incense. Three times was it done: when night fell—well into the night; and when it was time to sleep—the time when the flutes were blown.⁷ When this [took place], this was the time for offering their blood and offering maguey spines stained with blood. The third time incense was offered was when it dawned, when the morning broke, when the earth was visible—when morning was near.

And hence was it said that they resembled the fire drill: because when fire was drawn with a drill, and the drill bored, thus fell, ignited, and flared the fire.

And also for this reason all burned [spots on] their wrists; for this reason were we men burned on the wrists, to show awe of him. He was feared and dreaded. It was said and considered of any whose wrists were not burned that on his wrists fire would be drilled in the land of the dead, when he died. Therefore we men—every one—were burned on the wrists. On both sides of each wrist they arranged in order, in rows, their wrist burns. Thus they represented the fire drill. In the same manner as [the stars] were arranged in order and in line, so also they placed in order, in rows, their burns on their wrists.

[The Morning Star or Great Star]

Of the morning star, the great star, it was said that when first it emerged and came forth, four times it vanished and disappeared quickly. And afterwards it burst forth completely, took its place in full light, became brilliant, and shone white. Like the moon's rays, so did it shine.

And when it newly emerged, much fear came over them; all were frightened. Everywhere the outlets and openings⁸ [of houses] were closed up. It was said that perchance [the light] might bring a cause of sickness, something evil, when it came to emerge. But sometimes they regarded it as benevolent.

And also [captives] were slain when it emerged, [that] it might be nourished. They sprinkled blood toward it. With the blood of captives they spattered toward it, flipping the middle finger from the thumb; they cast [the blood] as an offering; they raised it in dedication.

Fourth Chapter, which telleth of the stars.

The Comet

It was said [to be] an omen for the ruler. Because of it a ruler was to perish; perchance some person of noble lineage would die. And likewise they said that somewhere he might be imprisoned, or war would begin. Or else there would be famine. The common folk said: "Perhaps this is our hunger; perchance famine," they said.

The Shooting Star

It was said that the passing of a shooting star rose and fell neither without purpose nor in vain. It brought a worm to something. And of [the animal] wounded by a shooting star, they said: "It hath been wounded by a shooting star; it hath received a worm." [Such] was not to be eaten. It was looked at with fear, abhorred, and shunned. It turned one's stomach.

And by night all were well protected. All covered themselves; they clothed themselves, wrapped themselves in mantles, and bound on their garments, for fear of the shooting star.

The S-Shaped Stars

[These] were apart; they appeared by themselves, shining and shimmering. And for this reason were they called S-shaped stars—that they were similar to and very much like a [kind of maize] tortilla which was made, or an amaranth seed tortilla. [These] were, at both ends, twisted and rounded over. They were eaten on the day Xochitl, everywhere, in each house. It was done in all places; in men's dwellings everywhere, they were made.

The Scorpion Stars

In the same manner, [these] resembled and appeared in the aspect of the venomous scorpion, with upcurved tail. Arched and upcurled is its tail; wherefore [these] are called the Scorpion Stars.

The Wind

That which was known as [the wind] was addressed as Quetzalcoatl. From four directions it came, from four directions it traveled. The first place whence it came was the place from which the sun arose, which they named Tlalocan. This wind which came from there they gave the name of Tlalocayotl. Little did it frighten men; lightly did it blow. With it, one could go in a canoe; with it one could land; with it one could cross the water.

The second place whence it came [the north] was called Mictlampa; and this was named the wind from the land of the dead. This was much feared, and caused much terror. Violently did it blow, when it set in, and the canoes could not contend with it. They could not travel forward. They could not venture forth; they could not pass across; they could not get under way in the water. Rather, all the boatmen came out and left [their craft] because of fear—those who gained their livelihoods on the water, the fishermen who used nets, or who speared [the fish]. When they saw that it was Mictlampa checatl which arose, then they feared evil and were troubled. They hurried, hastened, and greatly quickened their pace, plying the pole—plying it rapidly. They strained their arms, that they might come out and beach [the canoe] on the shore, on the edge of the water, near the water line. And so they said: "Often it drowneth men and sinketh canoes."

The third place whence it came [the west] was known as Ciuatlampa; it was named Ciuatecayotl and Ciuatlampa checatl. Also it was called One Wind, or Maçaua; for it came from Maçauacan. And this one did not blow fiercely. Nevertheless, it was very cold. Men suffered much from [its] cold; they became livid and stiff from cold. It made them shiver; it was deadly. It made men tremble, shake, and quake; it exhausted them; it gave them stomach pains, or pains in the lungs, or the head. And yet, with it they could go ashore from the water. It did not frighten men nor terrify them.

And the fourth place whence came the wind [the south] was there from Uitztlampa. It was named Uitztlampa checatl. And this one was much feared and held in dread. All feared harm. It made men speechless with terror; it made them silent with fear. Because it blew swiftly, it frightened them greatly. They said: "When it ariseth, it uprooteth and breaketh trees: and it teareth walls to pieces—old walls

Lightning: the Lightning Flash

They addressed it as, and named it, many things—the mist which went winding [like a serpent], the thunderbolt, the reed staff. When lighting flashed and lit up repeatedly, we were blinded, we lost our sight, our vision was darkened. It startled us; we were terrified. It was unbearable to look at; it was dazzling. Everywhere it flashed repeatedly—again and again—like the light of the dawn breaking over and over. Thus did it come; it came twisting and winding.

Fifth Chapter, which telleth of the clouds.

The Lord of Tlalocan

He was considered a god. To him were attributed rain and water. Thus they said he made that which we ate and drank—food, drink, our sustenance, our nourishment, our daily bread, our maintenance. All that which grew in the summer [he made]—sprouts, fresh green sprouts, trees, amaranth, chia, squash, beans; the maguey, the tuna cactus; and still others, not edible—flowers, herbs.

And when his feast was observed, first there was fasting for four days. The priests fasted in honor of Tlaloc in what was called the priests' house, where they had matured and grown.

When the fourth day had passed, when the fasting had ended, when the feast had been completed, [the evildoers] were plunged and submerged repeatedly in the lake. Not soft, not gentle was the punishment. They were plunged and immersed repeatedly in the water. They ill-used only those of their own kind. They dragged [the victim] back and forth through the mud. They plunged him under the water and dragged him; they went pulling him along by the hair; they kicked him. [As] he swam under the water, churning, beating, and swirling it up as he went, he escaped the hands of the priests.

When a fault had been committed in the priests' house, or some error had been done—even though someone had only stumbled, or tripped over something, at once, for this, they laid hold of him. Because of it they shut him in as their captive, no more taking their eyes from him, that they might plunge him in the water.

And to excess did they set upon him. Greatly did they afflict and torment him. He lay half dead, breathing his last, gasping, in his last agonies; at death's door [was he] whom they finally cast on the shore. No one could plead his cause. From thence [the victims'] fathers and mothers took them. And if anyone felt apprehension or foreboding for his son, in order that [the priests] should not plunge him into the water, in order that they should let him go, he offered the priests something of value—either a turkey or food. In return for it they let [his son] be.

And when this came to pass, everywhere, in the houses of all, in each house, *etzalli*⁹ was eaten. Each one made etzalli for himself; and there was a dance in which etzalli was begged. With green maize stalks they danced. Those who danced the etzalli dance entered house after house, each one begging and asking. [The householders] offered them all this same etzalli, [placing it] in the small jars, the etzalli jars, which they bore in their hands.

These [gods] were called Tlalocs. To them were attributed clouds, rain, hail, snow, mist, sheet lightning, thunder, and lightning bolts which struck men.

The Rainbow

As if arched—bent and rounded—it thus appeared. Varicolored, many-hued was its appearance. The single colors which showed in it [were] green, dark green, blue green, and black; and yellow and orange or tawny; then vermillion and ruby red; and [various shades of] blue, and dark green.¹⁰

And they said that when it appeared it revealed, made evident to men, and denoted—whereby it was known, realized, and seen—that it would not rain; would not rain hard—would not pour. But it would break up the clouds. It would dissipate, impede, and quiet the rain—the downpour which wet, soaked, and drenched one. If clouds piled up, if heavy clouds blackened [the sky] so that everywhere it was dark, it only dissipated [them]. Although it rained, no longer was the rain heavy; no longer did it increase. It only sprinkled; it drizzled; a few drops fell; a haze, a fog, a thin mist drifted and fell. Or at most it sprinkled; the sprinkling and the spray continued.

And they said—it was averred—that if it appeared over maguey plants, because of it the green [leaves] yellowed, turned, dried, reddened, and withered. And also they said [that] when it appeared many times, thereby it was evident [that] the rains were to end forthwith. They said: "Soon the masters of the rain will go; already the Tlalocs are about to leave."

10. Sahagún (Memoriales con escolios) has green for xoxoctic, quiltic, quilpaltic, iiapaltic, quilpalli, and iiapalli. Alonso de Molina, in his Vocabulario de la lengua mexicana (Julio Platzmann, ed.; Leipzig: B. G. Teubner, 1880), gives blue-green for quilpaltic and brown or black for iiapaltic. The second occurrence of this latter and of quilpalli is omitted in this translation. Molina translates xochipaltic as ruddy or rose-colored. In Memoriales con escolios, Sahagún treats both chichiltic and tlapaltic as red. For tlaztaleoaltic, Molina has red or rose-colored. For matlaltic and matllalli, the Memoriales has blue.

Sixth Chapter. Here are mentioned the snow, the clouds, and the hail.

[Frost]

The frost [god] was called Itztlacoliuhqui. Once yearly the cold came. During the feast of Ochpaniztli the cold began. And for one hundred and twenty days—one hundred and twenty suns—this persisted and there was cold. And it ended and disappeared [during the feast] called Tititl.

When [the month] came to an end, it was said: "For the frost hath departed. Now there will be sowing—it will be the time of sowing. Already land will be planted, so that [seeds] will be placed in the soil. Already it is warm, mild, calm. Already the season is good, the time is propitious; the hour is at hand; the time is ripe; the moment hath come." [For] already they hastened and were diligent. Already there was unrest; all men would be agitated and solicitous; they would be preoccupied. No longer would there be rest. Already the days would fly;¹¹ already there would be the setting forth for the working of the fields, the fresh working of the soil, the reworking of the fields; already the fields would be reworked. Now there would be planting of beans; beans would be placed. Now amaranth seed would be cast broadside; amaranth would be placed. Now chia seed would be cast; chili plants set out and transplanted. Already off-shoots would be pruned and separated, and all would bear fruit.

Snow

It was only the servant and companion which followed, accompanied, and spread the frost over the earth. It was considered to be like the rain. And it was said that when there was snow, [crops] would be harvested; the crops would be good. It foretold, and was an omen of, [good] crops.

Clouds

When [clouds] billowed and formed thunderheads, settled, and hung [about the mountain tops], it was said: "The Tlalocs are already coming. Now it will rain. Now the masters of the rain will sprinkle water."

Hail

It was formed and took shape when very white clouds settled on mountain tops. It was said: "Now it will hail; now our food will be hailed out."

And thus did hail fall, making a din as of rattling, beating one about the head, pelting one [as if] with stones. Thus, truly, died and were despoiled our crops. For some distance, it flattened on the ground and spread birds over the surface of the water. At that time the water dwellers went gathering for themselves; they brought in their catch.

And that it might not hail, that they might not be hailed upon, and the young maize plants might not be damaged by hail, then the [sorcerers who] cast away hail and rain drove and headed it off. They removed it from the waters [of the lake]; they showed it the way and took it [hence]. Or else they cast it forth into the deserted places, the uncultivated lands where there were no crops, no one lived, and nothing existed; poverty-ridden lands—barren lands where nothing grew, nothing issued: the land was void. It was only an abandoned place; the [very] stones were dry.

The Seventh Chapter telleth of the year counter and the year sign.

One Rabbit

It is said [that this was] the year sign and year counter of the south. For thirteen years it carried, set on its path, took with it, and bore the burden [of the years]. Always, during each [of the thirteen] years, it was the first, the one which led, began, became the start, and introduced as many year signs as there were: Reed, Flint, and House. Of the one [known as] Reed, it was said [that it was] as it were the sign of the east; that is, the year sign of the sun. For from there issued the light which shone forth.

And the third year sign, the one [known as] Flint, was called the sign of the north. For [the north] was said to be toward the land of the dead. Thus have the old people spoken: it is said that when one died, to that place set out, went straightway, and proceeded the dead. Therefore, when someone died—when [the sextons] adorned him, when they wrapped him in his mantle and bound him [in wrappings]—they made him look toward and seated him looking to that place.

And the fourth year sign, the fourth in order, [was] the one known as House—the sign of the west. For this reason they named it Ciuatlampa: it is said that there dwelt but women; none of us men were there.

These four year signs, year count[ers], as many times as they came to appear, [so many times] they came to be the beginning year signs.

When all the thirteen-year [periods]—all four of them—had concluded, ended, and finished, thus proceeding around, to give and leave their works from year to year, this [last] one came to, stopped at, jogged, knocked against, and ended at Thirteen House, the sign of the west. That is, now it approached [the end of its] thirteen years of labor.

And then One Rabbit came to settle itself as the sign of the south. When this occurred and it established itself and began its work, thus to bear a year

The Eighth Chapter telleth how they held in dread hunger and famine when One Rabbit ruled the year count, and what they first did when the year count of One Rabbit had not yet begun.

And [even] when [the year] One Rabbit had not yet set in, first provision was made; our food was hidden away, stored, saved up, and placed in bins. Nothing was thrown away; all then was saved—wild seeds not commonly eaten; musty maize; corn silk; corn tassels; pulp scraped from maguey tappings, tuna cactus flowers; cooked maguey leaves; heated maguey sap.

Everything was taken into account: [with] amaranth, even the weeds¹² were threshed; [as for] the beans, likewise were stored and put away unripened ones and the dried, withered ends of the green beans. and when they had used all, they satisfied and quickened themselves [with] bird seed, bitter amaranth or bright red amaranth, and yacacolli maize.¹³

This was the time when they bought people;¹⁴ they purchased men for themselves. The merchants were those who had plenty, who prospered; the greedy, the well-fed man, the covetous, the niggardly, the miser, who controlled wealth and family, guardians, the mean, the stingy, the selfish. In the homes of [such men] they crowded, going into bondage, entering house after house—the orphan, the poor, the indigent, the needy, the pauper, the beggar, who were starved and famished; who just as they went to sleep, just so awoke; who found nothing and got nowhere; who in no place found their rest, relief or remedy. At this time one sold oneself. One ate oneself; one swallowed oneself. Or else one sold and delivered into bondage his beloved son, his dear child.

[For] they had incurred sins. They had taken unto themselves, and placed themselves in, great wrong, through which they went always being slaves, until at last they were to die.

And even if he died, once again some one of his kin stood surety for him. Or else his beloved son offered himself and finished for him. None were neglected. Their kin and their lineage went on continuing and extending [the obligation]; they went on paying the debt and concerning themselves [with it]. Always they fulfilled the pledge, continued taking the place of others, served for one another; they all entered the households of their lords.

If sons or grandsons were born to him, at once [their elders] assigned them their great faults. When they matured, when they gained prudence, when they looked about, already servitude would be upon them. Already they wielded the hoe, they used the tump line; already they were [as] someone else's dogs, someone else's turkeys. For in truth [slavery] had come upon them; they had come against that which they could not leave—of which they could not be rid. For their fathers, their grandfathers, their mothers, and their grandmothers had proceeded to merit for them, to acknowledge for them, to bequeath them, to load and place upon them, [their transgressions]. For difficult was that which they had left and bequeathed them in time of famine—those who hungered and starved, who no longer were proud, who no longer persevered, who indeed were sick; who had eaten themselves, had sold themselves.

[This was] because they had prepared nothing for themselves, had shown no forethought for themselves; had paid no heed, had lived in negligence, and were disposed to evil before the year sign One Rabbit had begun—[when] it had not yet set in.

Thus was it said, that their fathers and grandfathers had succumbed to One Rabbit; hence they took on great sins.

When [the year] One Rabbit had fulfilled its task, when the year had been completed, then it delivered its charge to the sign of the east: Two Reed was the one which [then] set in.

Ninth Chapter, in which is described what was called "The Binding of Our Years," or "When the Years are Bound," [which occurred] when one by one the four year signs had each reigned thirteen years and when fifty-two years had passed; and what then was done.

When [came] the time of the binding of our years, always they gradually neared and approached [the year] Two Reed. This is to say: they then reached and ended [a period of] fifty-two years. For at that time [these years] were piled up, added one to another, and brought together; wherefore the thirteen-year [cycles] had four times made a circle,¹⁵ as hath been made known. Hence was it said that then were tied and bound our years, and that once again the years were newly laid hold of. When it was evident that the years lay ready to burst into life, everyone took hold of them, so that once more would start forth—once again—another [period of] fifty-two years. Then [the two cycles] might proceed to reach one hundred and four years. It was called "One Old Age" when twice they had made the round, when twice the times of binding the years had come together.

Behold what was done when the years were bound—when was reached the time when they were to draw the new fire,¹⁶ when now its count was accomplished. First they put out fires everywhere in the country round. And the statues, hewn in either wood or stone, kept in each man's home and regarded as gods, were all cast into the water. Also [were] these [cast away]—the pestles and the [three] hearth stones [upon which the cooking pots rested]; and everywhere there was much sweeping—there was sweeping very clean. Rubbish was thrown out; none lay in any of the houses.

And when they drew the new fire, they drew it there at Uixachtlan, at midnight, when the night divided in half. They drew it upon the breast of a Tenth Chapter, wherein is described the disposition of those who kept watch when the new fire appeared.

At nightfall, from here in Mexico, they departed. All the fire priests were arranged in order, arrayed in and wearing the garb of the gods. Each one represented and was the likeness of perhaps Quetzalcoatl, or Tlaloc, etc., or whichever one he went representing. Very deliberately, very stately, they proceeded, went spread out, and slowly moved. It was said: "They walk like gods." Thus, in deep night, they arrived there at Uixachtlan.

And the one who was the fire priest of Copulco, who drew new fire, then began there. With his hands he proceeded to bore continuously his fire drill; he went about making trials with his drill, the fire-maker.

And when it came to pass that night fell, all were frightened and filled with dread. Thus was it said: it was claimed that if fire could not be drawn, then [the sun] would be destroyed forever; all would be ended; there would evermore be night. Nevermore would the sun come forth. Night would prevail forever, and the demons of darkness would descend, to eat men.

Hence everyone ascended the terraces; all went upon the housetops. No one was on the ground below. The house was abandoned. They sat. And women with child put on masks of maguey leaves and took up their maguey-leaf masks. And [they] placed [the women] in granaries, for they were looked upon with fear. It was said and claimed that if, truly, the new fire were not drawn, these also would eat men; [for] they would be changed into fierce beasts.

And the small children they likewise masked with maguey leaves. None [of them] could sleep, or close, shut, or [even] half-close their eyes. From time to time their mothers and fathers were [there with them]; they kept waking them, punching and nudging them, calling out to them. They woke, cuffed, and nudged them. Because if they were to sleep—it was thought—they would turn into mice; they would become mice.

Hence was heed paid only one thing; there was unwavering attention and expectation as all remained facing, with neck craned, the summit of Uixachtecatl. Everyone was apprehensive, waiting until, in time, the new fire might be drawn—until, in good time, [a flame] would burst forth and shine out. And when a little came forth, when it took fire, lit, and blazed, then it flared and burst into flames, and was visible everywhere. It was seen from afar.

Then all the people quickly cut their ears, and spattered the blood repeatedly toward the fire. Although [a child] still lay in the cradle, they also cut his ears, took his blood, and spattered it [toward] the fire. Thus, it was said, everyone performed a penance.

Then [the priests] slashed open [the captive's] breast. In his breast [cavity] the new fire was drawn. They opened the breast of the captive with a flint knife called ixquauac. Etc.

Eleventh Chapter, in which is told what they did when it was seen and was evident that the new fire burst out.

And then everyone—the priests and fire priests—took the fire from there. [Having come] from all directions, the fire priests of Mexico had been sent there, charged with the task, as well as those who had come from distant [places] everywhere—messengers and runners. For these were all only chosen ones, strong warriors, valiant men, picked as best; the fleet, the swift, who could run like the wind. Because through them they could quickly have fire come to their cities.

First, the fire brand was prepared and adorned. It was called tlepilli. And this the fire priests brought. Before [doing] anything else, they took it up, direct, to the top of the temple [pyramid], where was kept the image of Uitzilopochtli, and placed it in the fire holder.¹⁷ Then they scattered and strewed white incense [over it]. And then they came down, and, also before [doing] anything further, they brought and took it direct to the priests' house, the place named Mexico.¹⁸ Later, this was dispersed, and fires were started everywhere in each priests' house and each calpulli; whereupon it went everywhere to each of the young men's houses. At that time all of the common folk came to the flame, hurled themselves at it, and blistered themselves as fire was taken. When thus the fire had been quickly distributed everywhere among them, there was the laying of many fires; there was the quieting of many hearts.

This same all the village fire priests did. That is, they carried the fire and made it hasten. Much did they goad [the runners] and make them hurry, so that they might speedily bring it to their homes. They hurried to give it to one another and take it from one another; in this way they went alternating with one another. Without delay, with ease, in a Twelfth Chapter, in which is told [the manner of conduct of] all the people when the new fire was taken. And, when this took place, everyone renewed his clothing and all the household goods.

Then, at this time, all renewed their household goods, the men's array, and the women's array, the mats—the mats of large, fat reeds,—and the seats. All was new which was spread about, as well as the hearth stones and the pestles. Also at this time [the men] were newly dressed and wrapped in capes. A woman—[such as she] dressed newly in their new skirts and shifts.

Thus it was said that truly the year newly started. There was much happiness and rejoicing. And they said: "For thus it is ended; thus sickness and famine have left us." Then incense was offered; [quail] were decapitated, and incense was offered. They grasped this incense ladle, and raised it in dedication to the four directions in the courtyard. Then they cast it into the hearth. Thus was incense offered.

Thereupon amaranth seed cakes overspread with honey were eaten. Then all were bidden to fast, and [it was ordered] that no one should drink from the time that it was completely light until it came to be considered midday. And when noon came, then captives and ceremonially bathed ones died. Then all rejoiced and there was feasting. Then once again fires were newly laid and placed.

And [as for] the pregnant women who had been feared, if any of them then gave birth to and bore a child; if a boy was born as her child, they named him Molpilli, Xuihtlalpil, Xiuhtzitzqui, Xiuhtli, Texiuh, Xiuhtlatlac, Quetzalxiuh, Xiuhquen, etc. And if [it was] a girl, Xiuhnenetl, Xiuhcue, Xiuhcoçol, etc.

And when, in the time of Moctezuma, our years were bound, he ordered that indeed everywhere should be sought a captive whose name [contained the word] xiuitl. Wheresoever [he was], this one was to be seized. And one was taken—a man from Uexotzinco, a well-born man. He was called Xiuhtlamin,

SUN, MOON, AND STARS, AND OF THE YEAR OF JUBILEE

EL 7.^o LIBRO TRATA DEL SOL Y DE LUNA
Y ESTRELLAS Y DEL AÑO DEL JUBILEO.²⁰

First Chapter, of the sun.

The sun hath the quality of shining and of lighting and of casting rays from himself. He is hot and he seareth; he maketh one sweat, and turneth a man's body and face dark brown or tawny.

El sol tiene propiedad de resplandecer y de alumbrar y de echar rayos de si. Es caliente y tuesta, haze sudar pa hosco o loro el cuerpo y la cara de la persona.

They celebrated a feast to the sun once each year in the sign named Four Olin. And before the feast they fasted four days as the vigil of the feast. And in this feast of the sun, four times they offered incense and blood from the ears—once at sunrise, another time at midday, at the vesper hour, and when [the sun had] set.

And when he came forth in the morning, they said: "Now the sun starteth his work. How will it be? What will come to pass on this day?"

And at sunset they said: "The sun hath ended his work, or task." Sometimes when the sun riseth, he seemeth blood-colored; and at times whitish; and sometimes he riseth sickly-hued because of the mist or the clouds which cover him.

When the people see this, they then raise a tumult. And a great fear taketh them, and then the women weep aloud. And the men cry out, [at the same time] striking their mouths with [the palms of] their hands. And everywhere great shouts and cries and howls were raised. The Calendar Wheel

This table placed above [opposite] is the year count, and it is a most ancient thing. They say that its inventor was Quetzalcoatl. It proceedeth in this way: they begin with the east, which is where the reeds are (or, according to others, with the south, where the rabbit is) and say One Reed. And thence they go to the north, where the flint is, and they say Two Flint Knife. Then they go to the west, where the house is, and there they say Three House. And then they go to the north, which is where the rabbit is, and they say Four Rabbit. And then they turn to the east, and say Five Reed. And thus they go, making four revolutions, until they reach thirteen, so that they end where they began. And then they return to one, saying One Flint Knife. And in this way, making revolutions, they assign thirteen years to each of the characters, or to each of the four quarters of the world. And then fifty-two years are completed, which is a bundle of years, when the Jubilee is celebrated and new fire is made in the manner set forth above [Chapters 9-12]. Then they again count as at the beginning. It should be noted that they disagree a great deal, in various places, as to the beginning of the year. In some parts, they told me that it began at some date in January; in others, that [it was] at the beginning of February; in others, that [it was] some time in March. In Tlatilulco I gathered together many old men, the most able ones whom I could secure, and, along with the most able of the college students, this matter was discussed for many days. And they all concluded that the year began on the second day of February.

Esta table, arriba puesta: es la cuenta de los años, y es cosa antiquissima. Dizen, que el inventor della, fue Quetzalcoatl: procede desta manera: que comienzan del Oriente, que es donde está las cañas: y segun otros, del medio dia, donde esta el conejo, y dizen ce acatl: y de alli van al Norte, donde esta el pedernal, y dizen vme tecpatl: luego van al occidente, donde esta la Casa, y alli dizen iey calli: y luego van al abrego, que es donde esta el conejo, y dizen naui tochtli: y luego tornan al oriente, y dizen macuilli acatl. Y ansi van dando quatro bueltas, hasta que llegan a treze, que se acaban a donde comenzó: y luego bueluen a vno, diciendo ce tecpatl. I desta manera, dando bueltas: dan treze años, a cada vno de los caracteres, o a cada vna, de las quatro partes, del mundo. I entóce, se cumplen. 52. años, que es vna gauilla de años: donde se celebra, el Iubileo, y se saca lumbre nueua, en la forma arriba puesta: luego bueluen a contar como de principio. Es de notar, que discrepan mucho, en diuersos lugares del principio del año: en vnas partes me dixerón, que comenzaua a tantos de Enero: en otras, que a primero de hebrero: en otras, que a tantos de Março: En el tlatilulco, junte muchos viejos: los mas diestros, que yo pude auer, y juntamente, con los mas habiles de los colegiales, se alterco esta materia por muchos dias: y todos ellos concluyeron, que comenzaua el año, segudo dia de Hebrero.

20. The calendar wheel

The reader might assume four spirals instead of the concentric lines shown. Beginning at the center with One Rabbit, proceed to Two Reed, Three Flint Knife, Four House, Five Rabbit, etc., and end at the outside circumference with Thirteen Rabbit. Begin again at the center with One Reed and proceed as before to the outside circumference at Thirteen Reed; and so on until the fourth spiral, which begins with One House, ends with Thirteen House, thus completing the fifty-two-year series.

This is the tale of the rabbit which is in the moon. They say that the gods played tricks on the moon and struck him in the face with a rabbit; and the rabbit remained marked upon his face. And with it they darkened his face as if with a weal. Thereafter he came forth to light the world. They said that, before there was day in the world, the gods came together in that place which is named Teotihuacan (which is the town of San Juan, between Chiconauhtlan and Otumba). They said to one another: "O gods, who will have the burden of lighting the world?" Then to these words answered a god named Tecuciztecatl, and he said: "I shall take the burden of lighting the world." Then once more the gods spoke, and they said: "Who will be another?" Then they looked at one another, and deliberated on who the other would be. And none of them dared offer himself for that office; all were afraid and declined. One of the gods, to whom no one was paying attention, and who was covered with pustules, did not speak but listened to what the other gods were saying. And the others spoke to him and said to him:

La fabula del conejo que esta en la luna; es esta. Dizen, que los dioses se burlaron con la luna y dieronla con vn conejo en la cara, y quedole el conejo señalado en la cara: y con esto le escurecieron la cara como con vn cardenal. Despues desso salio pa alumbrar al mundo. Dezian, que antes que ouiese dia en el mundo que iuntaron los dioses en aquel lugar que se llama teutioacā, (que es el pueblo de San Juan entre chicunauhtlan y otumba) dixerón los vnos a los otros. Dioses, quien tendra cargo de alumbrar al mundo? luego a estas palabras respondio vn dios que se llamaua Tecuciztecatl y dixo. Yo tomo a cargo de alumbrar al mundo. Luego otra vez hablaron los dioses y dixerón quien sera otro? Luego se miraró los vnos a los otros, y conferian quien seria el otro. Y ninguno dellos osaua ofrecerse a aquel ofi.^o todos temian y se escusavan. Vno dellos dioses de q no se hacia cuēta y era buboso, no hablaua sino oya lo que los otros dioses dezian. Y los otros hablaronle y dixerole: Se tu el que alumbres buboso. Y el de buena voluntad obedecio a lo que le mandaron y respondio, en mrd recibo lo que me aveis mandado

"You be the one who is to give light, little pustule-covered one." And right willingly he obeyed what they commanded, and he answered: "Thankfully I accept what you have commanded me [to do]. Let it be [as you say]." And then both began to perform penances for four days.

And then they lit a fire in the hearth which was made on a crag (which now they call teotexcalli). [As for] the god named Tecuciztecatl, all which he offered was costly. Instead of branches he offered precious feathers named quetzalli. And instead of balls of straw he offered balls of gold. And instead of maguey spines he offered spines made of precious stones. And instead of bloodied spines, he offered spines made of red coral. And the copal incense which he offered was very good. And the pustule-covered one, who was named Nanauatzin, in place of branches offered green rushes tied in threes—in all amounting to nine. And he offered balls of straw and maguey spines, and he bloodied them with his own blood. And instead of copal incense he offered the scabs from his pustules. For each of these was raised a tower like a mountain. On these same mountains they did penance four nights. (Today these mountains are called tzacualli; they are both near the town of San Juan, which is called Teotihuacan.) After they ended their four nights of penance, then they threw away the branches and all else with which they had performed penances.

This was done at the end, or at the conclusion, of the penitence, when, the next night—at midnight—they were to begin to perform their offices. And a little before midnight [the other gods] gave them their adornment. To the one named Tecuciztecatl they gave a feather [headdress] called aztacomitl and a linen jacket. And [as for] the pustule-covered one named Nanauatzin, they covered his head with [a] paper [headdress] called amatzonli, and put upon him a stole of paper and a paper breech clout. And midnight having come, all the gods placed themselves about the hearth, called teotexcalli. In this place the fire blazed four days. The aforementioned gods arranged themselves in two rows, some at one side of the fire, some at the other side. And then the two [gods] above mentioned placed themselves before the fire, facing the fire, between the two rows of gods, all of whom were standing. And then the gods spoke, and said to Tecuciztecatl: "How now, Tecuciztecatl! Go into the fire!" And then he braced himself to cast himself into the fire.

And since the fire was large and blazed high, as he felt the great heat of the fire, he became frightened and dared not cast himself into the fire. He turned back. Once more he turned to throw himself into the fire, making an effort and drawing nearer, to cast himself into the flames. But, feeling the great heat, he held back and dared not cast himself [into it]. Four times he tried, but never let himself go. A rule [had been] made not to try more than four times. Since he had tried four times, the gods then spoke to Nanauatzin, and said to him: "How now, Nanauatzin! You try!" And when the gods had addressed him, he exerted himself, and with closed eyes undertook [the ordeal] and cast himself into the flames. And then he began to crackle and pop in the fire like one who is roasted.

tecuciztecatl entra tu en el fuego. Y el luego acometio pa echarse en el fuego.
Y como el fuego era grande y estaua muy encendido, como sintio el gran calor del fuego, ouo miedo no oso echarse en el fuego, boluiose atras: otra vez torno para echarse en el fuego haziendose fuerça, y llegandose mas acerca para echarse en el fuego: pero sintiendo el calor grande detuuose, no oso echarse. Quattro veces prouo, pero nunca se dejó echar: estaua puesto mādamj.º que no prouarse mas de quattro veces. Desque ouo prouado quattro veces los dioses luego hablaron a nanauatzin y dixeronle. Ea pues nanauatzin prueua tu. Y como le ouieron hablado los dioses, esforçose y cerrado los ojos arremetio y echose en el fuego. Y luego comenzó a rechinar y responder en el fuego como quien se asa. And when Tecuciztecatl saw that [Nanauatzin] had cast himself into the flames, and was burning, he gathered himself [for the ordeal] and threw himself into the fire. And it is said that an eagle entered the blaze and also burned itself; and for that reason it has dark brown or blackened feathers. Finally a tiger [ocelot] entered; it did not burn itself, but [only] singed itself; and for that reason remained stained black and white. From here was taken the custom of calling men dexterous in war quauhtlocelotl. And they said quauhtli first, because the eagle first entered the flames. And last ocelotl is said, because the tiger [ocelot] entered the fire after the eagle. After both [the gods] had thrown themselves into the fire, and after they had burned, then the gods seated themselves to wait [to see] from what direction Nanaua[tzin] would come to rise.

Y dizen primero quauhtli porque el aguila p'mero entro en el fuego. Y dízese a la postre ocelotl porque el tigre entro en el fuego a la postre del aguila. Despues que ambos se ouieron arrojado en el fuego, y despues que se ouierō quemado: luego los dioses se sentaron a esperar a que pte vendria salir el nanaoa. After they had waited a long time, the heavens began to redden, and in every quarter the dawn appeared. And they say that after this the gods knelt down to wait [to see] where Nanaua[tzin], become sun, would rise. In every direction they looked, turning about. They never succeeded in guessing or saying from what quarter he would rise. They agreed in nothing. Some thought that he would come up in the north, and stood up to look there. Others stood to look toward the west; others to the south. They conjectured that he was to come forth in all directions, because at all the cardinal points there was the brilliance of the dawn. Others placed themselves so as to look to the east. They said: "Here, from this direction, the sun must rise." The declaration of these was true. They say that those who looked to the east were Quetzalcoatl; a second named Ehecatl; and another named Totec, or, by another name Anauatl itecu, and by [still] another name, Tlatlauic Tezcatlipoca; and others called Mimixcoa, who are without number; and four women, one named Tiacapan, another Teicu, a third Tlacoyeua, and a fourth Xocoyotl.

And when the sun came to rise, he looked very red. He appeared to waddle from one side to the other. None could look at him, because he snatched sight from the eyes. He shone and cast rays [of light] from himself in grand style. His light and his rays he poured forth in all directions. And thereafter the moon rose, in the same quarter, the east, like the sun. First the sun came forth, and after him came out the moon; in the order that they entered the fire, in [that] same [order] they came out made sun and moon. And those who tell stories or tales say that they had equal light with which they illuminated [the world]. And when the gods saw that they shed equal brilliance, they again spoke among themselves, and said: "O gods, how shall this be? Will it be well that both go alike? Will it be well that they illuminate equally?" And the gods gave a command, and said: "Let it be thus; let it be thus done." And then one of them went running and with a rabbit struck Tecuciztecatl in the face. He darkened his face and deadened [its] brilliance, and his face remained as it is today.

After both had come forth over the earth, the sun and moon remained still, without moving from one

Y quando vino a salir el sol, parecio muy colorado, parecia que se cōtöneava de vna pte a otra, nadie lo pudia mirar porque quitaua la vista de los ojos, resplandecia y echava rayos de si en grā manera su luz y sus rayos se derramo por todas ptes. Y despues salio la lūa en la misma pte del oriente a par del sol; Primero salio el sol y tras el salio la luna, por la orden que entraron en el fuego por la mesma salierō hechos sol y luna. Y luego vno dellos fue corriendo y dio con vn conejo en la cara a tecuciztecatl escureciole la cara y amatole el resplandor y quedo como agora esta su cara. place. And the gods once more spoke, and said: "How may we live? The sun does not move himself! Are we to live among the peasants? Let us all die and make him revive through our death!" And then the Wind took charge of killing all the gods, and he slew them. And it is told that one, named Xolotl, refused to die, and said to the gods: "O gods, let me not die." And he wept exceedingly, so that his eyes swelled with weeping. And when the slayer came to him, he hid in the maize fields, and he changed and turned himself into the foot of a maize plant which has two stalks, and the field workers call it xolotl. And he was seen and found among the feet of the maize stalks. Again he took flight and hid among the maguey plants, and changed himself into a maguey plant which has two bodies, which is called mexolotl. Once more he was seen, and he took flight and placed himself in the water and made himself into a fish which is called axolotl. From there they took him and slew him. And they say that although the gods were slain, not on that account did the sun move. And then the Wind began to blow and raise a strong gale. He made him move, so that he might go on his way. And after the sun began to travel, the moon was quiet in the place where he was.

After the sun had set, the moon began to move. Thus the one got away from the other. And thus they come forth at different times. The sun endureth one day, and the moon worketh at night (or illuminateth at night). From this cometh what is said: that Tecuciztecatl would have been the sun if he had cast himself first into the fire, because he was named first, and offered precious things in his penance.

Despues que el sol se puso comenzó la luna a andar: desta manera se desuiaron el vno del otro: y asi salen en diuersos tiempos. El sol dura vn dia y la luna trabaia en la noche o alumbra en la noche. De aqui parece lo que se dice q el tecuciztecatl avia de ser sol si p'mero se ouiera echado en el fuego porque el p'mero fue nōbrado y ofrecio cosas preciosas en su pñia.

Eclipse of the Moon.

When the moon is eclipsed, he becometh almost dark; he becometh blackened; he turneth a dark brown. Then the earth darkeneth. When this cometh to pass, women with child feared miscarriage. A great dread seized them that that which they had in their bodies would become mice. And as a remedy for this they took a piece of obsidian in the mouth or they placed it in the girdle over the belly and [did so] in order that the children [whom they carried] in the womb would not be born lipless or noseless or wry-mouthed, or cross-eyed, or that [one] might not be born monstrous.

The people of Xaltocan held the moon as a god and made him special offerings and sacrifices.

Quando la luna se eclipsa, parase casi oscura, ennegrecese, parase hosca: luego se escurese la tierra. Quando esto acontece las preñadas temian de abortar, tomauales gran temor que lo q tenian en el cuerpo se a de boluer raton. Y para remedio desto tomavan vn pedaço de ytztlí en la boca o ponianle en la cintura sobre el vientre y para que los ninos que en el vientre no saliesen sin becos o sin narizes, o boquituertos, o bizgos: o porq no naciese monstro.

Los de xaltoca tenian por dios a la luna y le hazia particulares ofrendas y sacrificios.

Third Chapter, of the Stars Called Castor and Pollux.

These people paid particular reverence and [made] special sacrifices to Castor and Pollux, in the sky, which move near the Pleiades, which are in the sign of Taurus. They made these sacrifices and ceremonies when [the stars] newly appeared to the east after sunset. After having offered incense, they said: "Now [hath] Yoaltecutli come forth, and Yacauitzli. What will come to pass this night? Or what end will the night have—fortunate or adverse?" Three times they offered incense (and [this] must be because they are three stars), the first time at the first quarter of the night, another time at ten, and the third [time] when it beginneth to be morning.—They name these stars mamalhuaztli, and by that same name they call the sticks with which they drill a fire; because it seemeth to them that they somewhat resemble [the stars] and that from them there came to them this manner of producing fire. From this it was customary that the

The star Venus these people named Citlalpol or Uey citlalin, and they said that when it riseth in the east it maketh four assaults. The [first] three times it shineth little and hideth again; and at the fourth it cometh forth with all its brightness and followeth its course. And they say of its light that it is like that of the moon. On its first assault they held it an omen of evil, saying that it brought sickness with it. And therefore they shut the doors and windows so that its light might not come in. And sometimes they took it as a good omen. And at the beginning of the time that it started to appear to the east, they slew captive men in reverence to it, and offered it their blood, spattering it toward [the star] with their fingers.

A la estrella de venus la llamaua esta gente citlal-pul, vey citlalli y dezian que quando sale por el oriente haze quatro aremetidas, y a las tres luze poco y bueluese a asconder: y a la quarta sale con toda su claridad y procede por su curso. y dizan de su luz que parece a la de la luna. En primera arremetida tenianla de mal aguero diciendo que traya enfermedad consigo, y por esto cerrauan las puertas y ventanas porq̄ no entrase su luz. Y a las veces la tomavan por buen aguero. Y al p'ncipio de t̄po que comenzaua a aparecer por el oriente matauan hōbres captiuos por su reverencia, y ofrecianle la sangre salpicando hazia ella con los dedos.

These people attributed the wind to a god whom they named Quetzalcoatl, something like god of the wind. The wind bloweth from the four quarters of the world by command of this god, according to what they said. The first quarter it cometh from is from the east, where they say is the terrestrial paradise which they call Tlalocan. This wind they called Tlalocayotl. It is not a furious gale; when it bloweth, it doth not hinder the canoes from moving on the water. The second wind bloweth from the north, where they say hell is; and hence they name it Mictlampa checatl, which meaneth the infernal wind. In hin uel imacaxo, etc.: this wind is violent, and therefore they fear it greatly. When it bloweth, canoes cannot go on the water. And all which are on the water come out with all the speed they can [muster] because of fear when it bloweth; for often they are endangered by it. The third wind bloweth from the west, where they said was the abode of the Amazons. They called it Ciuatlampa checatl or Ciuatecayotl, which is to say wind which bloweth from where the women abide. This wind is not savage, but it is cold. It maketh one tremble with cold. With this wind, navigation is good. The fourth wind bloweth from the south, and they name it Uitz-

Esta gente atribuia el viento a vn dios q̄ llamauan quetzalcoatl bien asi como dios de los vientos. Sofla el viento de quatro ptes del mundo por mandamiento deste dios segun ellos dezian. De la vna pte viene de hacia el oriente, donde ellos dizen estar el payso terrenal al qual llaman tlalocan. A este viento la llamauan tlalocayotl: no es viento furioso, quando el sofla no impide las canoas andar por el agua. El segundo viento sofla de hacia el norte donde ellos dizen estar el infierno y asi le llaman mictlampa checatl que q. d. el viento infernal. Yn hin vel ymacaxo etc. este viento es furioso y por eso le temen mucho quando el sofla no pueden andar las canoas por el agua. Y todos los que andan por el agua se salen por terror qñ el sofla con toda priesa que puedē porque muchas veces peligran con el. El tercero viento sofla de hacia el occidente donde ellos dezian que era la abitacion de las amazonas llamauanle ciuatlampa checatl o ciuatecayotl que q. d. viento que sofla de donde abitan las mugeres. este viento no es furioso: pero es frio, haze templar de frio con este viento bien se nauegan El quarto viento sofla de hacia el medio dia y llamanle vitztlāpa checatl q. d. viento q̄ sofla de aquella pte donde fueron los dioses que llaman viuitznava: este viento en estas ptes es furioso,

And if he tried to rise, by force they again pushed him under the water, until they almost drowned him. They who, in the house called calmecac, committed some fault—like breaking some vessel, or some such thing—these they seized and kept under guard in order to punish them on that day. And sometimes the parents of him who was thus detained gave chickens or capes or other things to the priests so that they would let [him] go and not drown [him]. To those whom they thus illtreated, neither their parents nor their kin dared show favor nor speak for them, if previously they had not freed them while they were imprisoned; and so badly did they treat [the victims] that they even left them almost for dead cast on the brink of the water. Then their parents took them up and carried them to their houses. In this feast of these gods, all the common folk ate maize boiled like rice. And the priests went dancing and singing through the streets. In one hand they carried a stalk of green maize, and in the other a pot with a handle. In this way they went asking that [the householders] give them boiled maize. And all the common folk cast that boiled maize into the pots which they carried.

y si se queria leuantar tornauâle por fuerça, a meter debaxo del agua hasta que casi le ahogauâ. Los que en la casa llamada calmecac hazian algun defecto como es quebrar alguna basija o cosa semejante los prendian y tenian guardados para castigallos aquell dia. Y algunas veces los padres del que asi estaua preso daban galinas, o mantas o otras cosas a los tlamacaces porque lo soltasen y no le ahogasen. A los que maltratauâ desta manera ni sus padres ni sus parientes osauan favorecellos ni hablar por ellos si antes no los avian librado estâdo presos y tanto los maltratauâ hasta que los dexauâ casi por muertos arrojados a la orilla del agua. Entonces los tomauan sus padres y los lleuauan a sus casas. En esta fiesta destos dioses todos los maceuales comian mayz cozido hecho como arroz. Y los tlamacaces andauan baylando y cantando por las calles en vna mano trayan vña caña de mayz verde y en otra vna olla con asa por este modo andauâ demandando que les diesen mayz cozido y todos los maceuales les echauan en las ollas que trayan de aquel mayz cozido.

And when the rainbow fixeth itself over a maguey, they said it would cause [the plant] to dry or wither.
And they also said that when the rainbow appeareth often, it is a sign that the season of rain is about to cease.

y quando de arco del cielo se pone sobre algun maguey dezian que le haria secar o marchitar. Y tanbiē dezian que quando espesas veces aparece el arco del cielo, es señal que ya quieren cesar las aguas.
